

Insurance for voluntary and community groups

CORE 07

An appropriate level of insurance is necessary for any voluntary or community group. Any action, or failure to act, by an organisation is in practice the responsibility of one or more individuals within the organisation. It is therefore advisable to make sure that you have adequate insurance to cover the organisation's assets, the general public and your staff, committee members, volunteers and members against any liability which they may incur while carrying out the organisation's work.

Whatever type of insurance you take out, it is essential that it covers you for the right amount. If you are unsure how to calculate this, take advice from a reputable insurance broker who understands your organisation and has experience of your area of work.

Who can take out insurance?

If you are an unincorporated organisation, any insurance must be taken out in the name of your committee members, but the proposal form should be signed by one individual on behalf of the other committee members. If that person leaves the organisation the insurance must be transferred to someone else's name.

Incorporated organisations can take out insurance in the name of the organisation.

Types of cover

There are two types of insurance which are required by law:

Employer's liability insurance. If you employ staff, you have a duty to insure against claims by workers for illness or injury caused by the organisations negligence. There is a minimum statutory cover. The employer's liability insurance certificate must be prominently displayed in the workplace. All certificates have to be kept for 40 years. Be aware that this insurance does not usually cover volunteers, committee members, service users, consultants, trainees or self-employed people, although some specialist policies will cover volunteers. You will need public liability insurance to cover these groups. You can also insure against staff being off sick by taking out Accident & Medical insurance.

Road traffic insurance – if your organisation uses vehicles on the road, you must have this to insure drivers against third party risks. It is probably worth extending this insurance to cover all damage with a comprehensive policy. If you have volunteer drivers using their own vehicles you must make sure their vehicles have insurance cover for their volunteer use.

Other types of insurance may be required by a landlord, funder or local authority, or because it is in the organisation's best interest. These types of insurance include:

Public liability insurance – this covers claims for personal injury or property damage caused to any member of the public as a result of the organisation's negligence. It will not cover injury or damages arising from negligence in the course of providing any sort of professional service – see Professional Indemnity Insurance below. Make sure that your cover includes volunteers as it does not cover employees of the organisation.

Buildings insurance – if you lease your premises, this may be your responsibility or it may be taken care of by your landlord, in which case you have the right to inspect the policy. If you own your premises, be aware that under charity law there is a duty to protect a charity's assets. A committee which left a building uninsured could be seen as negligent in their duty. The costs of re-building, including professional fees, and the costs of temporary accommodation should be covered. Shop fronts may need special insurance.

Contents insurance – this gives cover against theft or damage. Make sure that you keep the figure insured up to date and notify your insurers about any shared equipment. The insurer may insist on you buying special locks or alarms. To extend this insurance you may want to

- cover equipment which is taken out from the main base 'All Risks insurance'
- cover for 'Accidental Damage'
- cover for 'Equipment damage & breakdown' if you depend heavily on technical equipment eg computers

Professional indemnity insurance – public liability insurance will not cover injury or damages arising from negligence in the course of providing any sort of professional service, for example giving advice or providing health treatment, even if the service is free. This is when professional indemnity insurance becomes necessary. It can be expensive, but some national umbrella organisations have negotiated lower rates for members. It can be extended to cover slander or libel which may be important for campaigning organisations.

Trustee and directors' indemnity insurance – this protects trustees (also known as committee members) or directors against the risk of personal liability arising from breach of trust and negligence to the organisation itself. It does not insure against liability for the organisation's debts, or negligence to third parties.

There are many other types of cover which you may decide are relevant to your assets and the type of work that you do. You may wish to seek the advice of a reputable insurance broker who understands your particular activities and risks.
